

Your chance to have a look at the Healthy Kids Bus Stop Stations!

Child and family health nurse

At the child and family health nurse station, general health information such as height, weight, BMI, oral health, emotional wellbeing, a hearing check, a vision check, and an immunisation check are gathered with the parents help. This is an initial screening to identify any health problems and promote healthier lifestyles.

Speech pathologist

During the session with the speech pathologist, parents will have a chance to flag any concerns with language difficulties and indicate if there is a family history of speech issues. The child is then tested for language and articulation markers.

Occupational therapist

The occupational therapist chats with the parents to assess their child's general development, self-care skills, sensory skills, and attention abilities. They then conduct tests around fine motor, visual motor, gross motor skills and make observations around posture, attention, focus and engagement to gain an overall picture.

Dietician

During the session with the dietitian, parents can address any food and nutrition concerns. Measurements for weight, height and BMI are recorded and the dietitian refers to the Australian Guide to Healthy Eating to promote healthy lifestyles.

Oral health

Utilising a disposable mirror and a dental chart, the dentist will assess the child's teeth and provide any referrals needed. This station allows the parents to discover any oral health issues which may be affecting their child.

Audiometrist

During the audiometry check, parents get the chance to flag any hearing issues and a comprehensive hearing test is conducted. This involves an inspection of the ear, a test of the middle ear function and test of the child's response to sound.
